UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH

Students who enroll in HK 490/496 participate in guided research, including conducting a literature review, data collection and entry, development of research analysis materials, and data analysis. It is important that students learn the research process step-by-step. Throughout the semester, students conduct a review of literature, submit purpose and research questions/ hypotheses, learn methodology, collect data, and independently analyze data. Depending upon the quality of their contribution, students may be included on conference presentations and academic publications. [1] Indicates students who have been co-authors on oral conference presentations and academic publications. [2] Indicates students who have been research assistants on projects that were published as refereed articles or oral conference presentations.
