Purdue Peace Projects working to solve disputes in West Africa has 1st success story in Ghana

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
November 01, 2013 - 4:04 am EDT

WEST LAFAYETTE, Indiana — A group from Purdue University that seeks to resolve disputes among groups in West African countries has its first success story.

Purdue Peace Project Director Stacey Connaughton says a dispute in Berekum (bear-a-KUUM’), Ghana, had lasted since the year 2000 over who was the chief. And with the December 2012 Ghana parliamentary elections approaching, there was concern about possible political violence.

Purdue got involved in early 2012 and helped local citizens resolve the situation through a peace committee consisting only of local citizens. Last September, Berekum announced it had a new, approved chief.

Throughout its involvement, the Purdue team collects data and interviews people about the conflict and the process to resolve it.

The Purdue Peace project also is working with communities in Liberia and Nigeria to resolve community conflicts.

Story copyright 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Feedback, Corrections and Other Requests: AP welcomes feedback and comments from readers. Send an email to info@ap.org and it will be forwarded to the appropriate editor or reporter.