More Bang for Your Buck

Milt Lauenstein
Funder & Benefactor of the Purdue Peace Project
Member, Peace & Security Funders Group

Dr. Stacey L. Connaughton
Associate Head & Associate Professor
Director of the Purdue Peace Project
The Brian Lamb School of Communication
Purdue University, USA
A Locally Driven Peacebuilding Approach

Locally Driven Prevention = More Bang

Lower Cost Buck
The mission of the Purdue Peace Project is to encourage and assist local leaders in fragile states to address clearly identified situations that threaten to lead to political violence. In promoting locally-driven and inclusive approaches to peacebuilding, we seek to reduce the likelihood of political violence and contribute to lasting peace. In doing so, we also seek to add to the body of knowledge in this field by documenting and disseminating our work to practitioners and scholars alike.
Our Guiding Principles

• Local citizens can design, lead, and implement peacebuilding activities
• All individuals can contribute to peace
• Dialogue can lead to effective action toward preventing violence
• Knowledge resides within local citizens
• Peacebuilding efforts stand the best chance of being effective if they originate from individuals local to the conflict
Projects

• Countries
  – 3 projects in Ghana;
    2 in Liberia; 2 in Nigeria

• Contexts
  – Chieftancy disputes, land disputes, and violence between a host community and a university community
• We test the following theory of change:

If we bring together a representative and inclusive group of local citizens, and facilitate an opportunity for them to engage in dialogue, they will identify and implement an effective set of strategies to prevent political violence.
1. Scan the environment in West Africa to identify issues that could trigger political violence

2. Determine whether an issue is one that could be worked on with the PPP model, given our scope and resources

3. Identity who should be part of the dialogue and subsequent actions
4. Approach those relevant parties to see if they are interested in engaging in dialogue with other parties around the issue at hand.

5. Create the dialogic space in which representatives from all relevant parties can enter into genuine dialogue with one another.

Liberia – Pen-Pen Drivers Project
6. Facilitate the implementation of strategies that they co-create to prevent political violence

7. Collect data at multiple points in time to assess the impact(s) of these efforts and to evaluate our locally-driven peacebuilding approach
Our Team

Ms. Rosaline B. Obeng-Ofori
Agaptus Anaele
Arunima Krishna
Kai Kuang
Jasmine Linabary
Liliya Yakova
Peace in Motion

Since its devastating civil wars between 1989 and 2003, tensions related to natural resources management have threatened to disrupt Liberia’s peace and trigger political violence. The Purdue Peace Project, directed by Stacey Connoughton, associate professor in the Brian Lamb School of Communication (BLSC), has been working with local citizens, industry, government, and non-governmental organizations to help prevent such political violence from taking place. For the first time, the group’s efforts have been captured on film.

This spring, Doug Bluma, clinical assistant professor in the BLSC, traveled with Connoughton to Liberia to help film the group’s work. This footage is being made into a documentary on Liberia and depicts efforts by the Purdue Peace Project to assist in a home-grown peace.

Bluma has also worked as an independent documentary filmmaker, with some of his work screened at media and film festivals around the world. He serves as advisor to Fast Track, a student-produced half-hour weekly news magazine at Purdue, and through a community engagement grant, has recently been working with students on a series of nature documentaries that will be screened at local schools and shared at the Lilly Nature Center in West Lafayette.

“The difference between narrative and documentary film making is that in narrative films, you walk in with a script and know exactly what you are shooting. In documentary work, you sometimes have to go to have an idea and do a lot of shooting, and your ideas change as you are shooting,”

In both the dusty plains of West Lafayette and the fastlands of Liberia, students are learning these principles in order to develop their ability to communicate through film.

“The nature documentaries give me an opportunity to show students documentary filmmaking in a much more controlled situation,” says Bluma. “But for the student who went with us to Liberia, we didn’t know what to expect.”

That student was Krist Jones (BA 2014, BLSC). Jones was the only undergraduate to travel with the Purdue Peace Project to Liberia and he has played a central role in filming and helping to complete the Liberia documentary.

“One of the missions of the Brian Lamb School of Communication is engagement,” says Bluma. “It’s great to learn out of textbooks, but unless you are really stepping into the lessons, you aren’t learning everything that you could.”

Jones hopes to work in documentary filmmaking one day, and this experience is a vital part of his Purdue education—both intellectually and culturally.

“The majority of my experience prior to working with the Purdue Peace Project was a few of Professor Bluma’s classes, including the documentary film course and Fast Track, which I helped produce,” says Jones. “When he asked me to go with him to film the Peace Project, I thought it was a great opportunity, but didn’t really know what to expect. My time in Africa was unforgettable. I’ll never be able to thank the people of Liberia or the Purdue Peace Project for opening my eyes to another culture.”

-Krist Jones
Examples of Locally Driven Peacebuilding

Delta State, Nigeria

Monrovia, Liberia

Berekum, Ghana
Liberia: The Pen-Pen Drivers Project
Liberia: The Pen-Pen Drivers Project

• The Issue
  − Tensions between pen-pen drivers, police, and customers
  − Concerns that pen-pen drivers could be utilized again during campaigns to incite violence

• Key actor groups
  − Pen-Pen Drivers
  − National Police of Liberia
  − Ministry of Transportation
  − Community Members
  − Market Women
Actor Group Meeting

- July, 2013
The Pen-Pen Peace Network

- 15 representatives
  - The police
  - Ministry of Transport
  - Pen-pen drivers unions
  - Pen-pen drivers themselves
  - Market women
  - Customers of pen-pen drivers
Identified Strategies

• A multi-media campaign
  – To (a) raise awareness among all actor groups about each other, and (b) change attitudes and behaviors of all actor groups toward one another

• Organizational strategies
  – In collaboration with the pen-pen driver unions

• Policymaking and enforcement
  – Through collaboration among governmental officials, the Ministry of Transport, police, and pen-pen driver unions
Multi-Media Campaign

Photo credit: PPP
The Ebola Outbreak
• 694 Liberians had died from Ebola by the end of August 2014 (WHO, 2014)
• Those were the official counts.
• 4,241 Liberians had died by March 15, 2015

Photo credit: BBC
Shift in Focus: Ebola Prevention

• Citizen-to-Citizen Ebola Prevention Campaign
  – Sought to raise public awareness about the Ebola virus, deliver crucial information about the spread of the disease as well as preventative measures, and motivate behavioral changes
  – Originated with the local citizens
The Ebola Prevention Campaign
The Ebola Prevention Campaign

• 25 sanitary stations in 5 communities in Monrovia

• Disseminated Ebola awareness messages in English and 8 different local dialects via interpersonal and mediated channels

• Distributed more than 2,588 brochures and 250 posters

• Designed and produced dramas about the Ebola outbreak in 8 different dialects have been broadcasted over radio in 5 counties in Liberia
The PPP Team

- Data Collection
  - 61 Skype interviews
  - 261 Daily logs

- Recorded, transcribed, and analyzed
Impact

• The Pen-Pen Peace Network
• By January 2015
  – Visited more than 6,000 houses
  – Spoke to more than 28,000 Liberian citizens
  – According to the chairman of the AB Tolbert Road community, “WOMSUD-Liberia is the only NGO that went in this community and set up handwashing stations with a regular supply of materials and did a house-house awareness visitation”
  – Contributed to changes in Liberians’ beliefs and behaviors
From soldiers to peacebuilders: can Liberia's taxi drivers help stop Ebola?

As the virus spreads, pen-pen motorcycle taxi drivers have been co-opted to appease public frustrations over weak governance.

The Liberian government responded slowly to the Ebola crisis, asking the international community to do what some have argued it should have done itself. Now, there are indicators that the government is dependent on the goodwill of Challenges of Locally Driven Work

- Monetary Expectations
- Skepticism from Local Citizens
- Skepticism from Peacebuilding Practitioners
- Building trusting relationships from afar

Photo credit: WOMSUD
A Locally Driven Peacebuilding Approach

Locally Driven Prevention = More Bang

Lower Cost           Buck
A Locally Driven Peacebuilding Approach